If you read one book this year, it should be Zoe Ferraris' City of Veils. Written on the shifting sands of the Saudi desert, it's an incredible perspective from behind the veil, in the voices of those who center their soul in a place so far, and so different, from here.

American novelist Ferraris lived in Saudi Arabia with her then husband and his extended family of Saudi-Palestinian Bedouins in the wake of the first Gulf War. Here she renders a suspenseful mystery and a sobering portrait of the lives of Muslim women.
